Education Advocacy in Florida

Making sure your child gets every service they're entitled to.

Education advocacy is one-on-one help getting your child the school support they're entitled to. Under federal law, a child with a disability has the right to an Individualized Education Program, or IEP, a plan the school must follow and pay for. Evaluations get delayed and support gets watered down, and many families don't realize they can push back. A Turnout education advocate prepares with you, joins your IEP meetings, reviews the plan, and pushes for everything the law requires.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

What's the difference between an IEP and a 504 plan?

An IEP provides specialized instruction and services for a child with a disability. A 504 plan provides accommodations, like extra time or seating changes, but not specialized instruction. A child who needs more than accommodations usually needs an IEP.

What does an education advocate do?

An education advocate helps you understand your child's rights, prepares with you before meetings, joins your IEP meetings, and pushes back when the school offers less than the law requires.

Can I use my child's IEP to pay for private school in Florida?

Yes. Florida's Family Empowerment Scholarship for Unique Abilities (FES-UA) lets families use an existing IEP to qualify for a state-funded education savings account, which can cover private school tuition, therapy, and tutoring. Most states don't offer anything like this.
